WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

One restaurant that's new to Boston is encouraging patrons getting their chow down to also think about helping the less fortunate get a bite to eat. Zambrero, Australia's largest Mexican restaurant chain, just opened its first two stateside locations in the Boston area. They've donated 20 million meals since opening and advertise their goal in large signs in the eatery: beating world hunger. Read more on page 4 and at metro.boston.us.

MASS TEACHER CHARGED WITH INDECENT ASSAULT

IA Massachusetts elementary school teacher has been charged with sexual assaulting students during school hours. Noah Campbell-Halley, 36, a technology teacher at the Stony Brook Elementary School in Brewster, was arrested by Brewster police following an investigation sparked by concerned parents who came to the police with information about "inappropriate sexual contact between their child" and

Campbell-Halley, the police said. Campbell-Halley was arraigned in Orleans District Court Thursday on three counts of indecent assault and battery on a child, two counts of rape of a child and one count of intimidating a witness, the Cape Cod Times reported. He pleaded not guilty and was ordered held on $25,000 bail. The students Campbell-Halley allegedly raped were in first grade, the Times reported. KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

STATE BILL TO REGULATE AIRBNB CLEARS HOUSE

2 Trying to bring state law in line with the new ways in which people rent short-term lodging, the Massachusetts House on Thursday passed legislation to regulate and tax the short-term rental industry. Short-term rentals through websites like Airbnb, HomeAway and VRBO have grown in popularity over recent years, creating new revenue streams for property owners and giving travelers more options, but critics say the trend is changing neighborhoods and should be regulated in the same way hotels and motels are. The House passed its rental regulation bill 117-30 on Thursday afternoon, though there was no debate on the bill or any of the 29 amendments representatives filed to it. The House bill does not require a minimum number of rental days before the tax applies. STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

CALLS FOR GUN CONTROL IN BOSTON AT MARCH FOR OUR LIVES RALLY

3 Student activists marched from Madison Park High School to Boston Common Saturday as part of a nationwide demonstration calling for more stringent gun laws.

Saturday's march, which was a sister event of the national March for Our Lives movement, was estimated by organizers to have drawn as many as 50,000 protesters to Boston Common, where protesters rallied and heard from speakers. Their main goal — to motivate lawmakers to step up and do something about gun violence; not just talk about it.

March for Our Lives drew protesters across the U.S., including in New York City, Philadelphia and Washington, D.C. The event was organized after the Florida school shooting on Feb. 14 in which 17 people were killed. MORGAN ROUSSEAU

MNUCHIN: PRESIDENT NOT AFRAID OF A TRADE WAR

4 Despite threats of retaliation from China over U.S. plans to impose tariffs on up to $60 billion in Chinese goods, Treasury Secretary Steve Mnuchin on Sunday said President Donald Trump had no intention of backing down and was not worried about a trade war. "We are going to proceed with our tariffs. We're working on that," Mnuchin told "Fox News Sunday." "So, as President Trump said, we're not afraid of a trade war, but that's not our objective." Fears of a trade war between the United States and China have sent U.S. stock prices tumbling. The Dow Jones Industrial Average and the S&P 500 both lost nearly 6 percent by the end of last week. A memorandum signed by Trump last week will target up to $60 billion in Chinese goods with tariffs over what his administration says is misappropriation of U.S. intellectual property.

TRUMP CITES CONFLICTS IN LEGAL TEAM SHAKE-UP

5 President Donald Trump will not hire two lawyers to his legal team handling the special counsel's probe despite announcing their addition last week, Trump's personal lawyer said on Sunday, adding to uncertainty about the president's legal representation in the Russia investigation. "The president is disappointed that conflicts prevent Joe diGenova and Victoria Toensing from joining the president's special counsel legal team," Jay Sekulow said in a statement. "However, those conflicts do not prevent them from assisting the president in other legal matters. The president looks forward to working with them." The announcement came nearly a week after Sekulow said diGenova would join the legal team handling Special Counsel Robert Mueller's investigation into possible collusion between the Trump campaign and Russia.

Zambbrero has a goal to donate one billion meals by 2025. FACEBOOK/ZAMBRERO US

Help beat world hunger with burritos from this Harvard Square eatery Zambbrero, a “Mexican with a mission” chain in Australia, opened its first U.S. locations in Cambridge and Rhode Island.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

An Australian fast-casual chain has picked Harvard Square as one of its first United States locations, and it's bringing a world-changing mission along with its meals.

Zambbrero, the largest Mexican franchise chain in Australia, opened its first two U.S. locations this week in Harvard Square and Warwick, Rhode Island.

As customers enter in search of burritos and bowls, they're first greeted with a bright green sign that welcomes the customer to join Zambbrero's ultimate goal: beating world hunger.

Zambbrero's tagline is “Mexican with a mission,” and the company has partnered with Rise Against Hunger, a U.S.-based international hunger relief nonprofit, to continue its Plate 4 Plate initiative here. Through Plate 4 Plate, the restaurant donates a meal to someone in need for every burrito or bowl ordered.

Zambbrero has donated more than 20 million meals since its opening. For Dr. Sam Prince, who launched Zambbrero back in 2005 when he was a 21-year-old medical school student, coming to the U.S. is more than just another business opportunity. It's a connection back to the roots that inspired him, and a step closer to his goal of donating one billion meals by 2025.

“This country is based off this migrant story that is my parents' story,” Prince said. “It's something that is celebrated here in the U.S., so for me it was a dream come true to see Zambbrero on U.S. shores.”

Prince's parents are the spark behind his philanthropic fire. They pulled themselves out of poverty in Sri Lanka to raise him and his sister in Australia.

“They came from very humble beginnings but were given a free education in a remote part of the developing world,” he said. “That was kind of an important part of our past and our story and hopelessly intertwines with the Zambbrero story.”

20 MILLION

Number of meals that Zambbrero has donated since its opening in 2005.

After med school, and after starting Zambbrero to fill what he saw as a gap of healthy Mexican food in Australia, Prince did work overseas as a doctor, delivering aid in remote parts of the world similar to where his parents were born. He wanted to bring his aid work back into his restaurants, and Plate 4 Plate was born.

Now, with Zambbrero in the U.S., even more people can satisfy their hunger with burritos, bowls, tacos, chips and dip and more (including vegetarian, vegan and gluten-free options) and help feed someone else in need. To Prince, the Boston area is a perfect fit for his mission.

“The U.S. and Boston specifically ... have really been places where [people] have been supportive of other communities and global citizens at large,” he said. “I think our message will resonate well with the community here.”

Street food with philosophy

We spend a night with Manhattan's freegans to see what "dumpster diving" is really like — and discover how wasteful this city is.

EVA KIS
eva.kis@metro.us

Not many rich people spend a freezing night digging through the trash bags lining New York City's sidewalks.

But that's the bombshell dropped by Janet, one of the leaders in the city's freegan community who salvage still-edible food that has been thrown out with the trash by businesses.

"I totally choose to do this," she says. "I can buy anything I want. But that does not mean I should choose to spend it on wasteful, destructive products."

Janet, a retired teacher in New York, leads twice-monthly freegan tours of Manhattan. ALL PHOTOS EVA KIS

Metro accompanied her and five other freegans on one of their twice-monthly group "freegan tours," which will be featured on the new series Food Exposed premiering March 27 on Fusion. The eight-part documentary will explore food-related issues like overfishing, dairy farming and GMOs, but it all begins with a look at the colossal scale of food waste happening every day. In the U.S., 40 percent of edible food is wasted while nearly 50 million Americans live in poverty.

"By the end of the night, I'll feel so uuuugh," says host Nelufar Hedayat, mimicking something between a headache and nausea. "When you touch the bread and it's still warm — it's just too much."

What we found

Most households don't throw away food unless it's beginning to liquefy at the bottom of the crisper — or, at least, that's how it goes in my apartment. But the rules are different for businesses. The item could simply be past its optimal freshness, approaching but not yet past its sell-by date or simply considered too ugly to sell, as is the fate of many fruits and vegetables.

So what's in the trash bags that line Manhattan's Second Avenue sidewalks — the lack of alleyways makes the city's refuse more accessible than most — is often not garbage.

Our first stop is a drug store chain whose unsold ready-made sandwiches and salads can reliably be found on the sidewalk, just feet from the refrigerated cases where they sat just hours, or even moments before. Tonight though, the group came up empty. At 9:55 p.m., they agree it was probably too early.

Next is a pet store that can be found all over the country, where the group makes its biggest find of the night: large bags of brand-name dog and cat food, including a $47 bag of organic, non-GMO Blue Buffalo. None of them are expired — the closest was 12 days out, and especially for dry goods expiration dates don't mean they become inedible. "Donating it would be a tax write-off," Janet also points out. At least her two cats will eat well tonight.

The third stop, a small grocery chain, is the first glimpse of true food waste. Rotisserie chickens that are still warm; unripe bananas that have been bruised, paradoxically left in a limbo where they're both before their peak and past it; bell peppers more gorgeous than what can be found on market shelves in Brooklyn. "So much food," a woman dressed for a night out laments as she walks past.

A large independent cafe has a lot of trash, but only its bagels — soft and plump, in every variety — are salvageable. Next door, a small health food store has discarded individual bags of plantain chips that retail for $3 each, days from expiration. The bags have been slashed open slightly, a common practice to prevent reselling. Some in the group are deterred, but not all. The jackpot is wrapped packages of lavender essence, just past their sell-by date; there's enough for everyone to take one.

The night's final stop — freegan food tours wind down not because they run out of garbage to search, but hands and bags to carry it all — is an Amish market, with rice crackers for babies, perfect ears of corn and bottled sauces.

We also encounter the first employee who might object, but before he can even say anything, Janet calls out "no mess," and he heads back inside. It's her go-to line for heading off conflict, she says (the police don't bother her). "That's what most of them are worried about, and then getting a $100 fine for littering."

If a bag is too heavy or too light, it's probably not worth the trouble.

"I think most of the employees feel bad. Look, they put these bagels in a bag by themselves, not in with other trash."

The philosophy of free

Her teacher's pension —

as well as not having had children and being frugal all her life — gives Janet the ultimate freedom: to live as she chooses. Being a freegan has given her a certain spiritual wealth, too.

Noticing the casual waste all around you makes the freegan life feel like any other act you'd do to help the world. Janet says people often find her group's website, freegan.info, while reading about environmental issues. Anyone who's interested — whether or not they intend to take something home — can come on their tours.

Some people live this way out of necessity. But there are many like Janet, who do it because of a philosophy that rejects what she sees as simple corporate greed.

"We're hoping that people can stop being slaves to the corporations that insist you need to have the latest new thing," she says.

"I feel comfortable wearing used things. The money is what makes me uncomfortable, actually."

Millennials and money — here's what they're doing wrong

NerdWallet is a personal finance website.

The generation that's coming into their own right now gets a bad rap when it comes to finances. But that's not entirely deserved.

Millennials are generally doing a great job stashing money away for the future, but some studies show they're wary about investing those savings in the stock market.

Millennials are, indeed, saving

Although organizations vary in how they define the millennial generation, it broadly encompasses those born in the 1980s and 1990s. Looking at several studies paints a picture of their general habits:

- 71% of millennial workers are saving for retirement, either in a workplace plan or outside of work, and the median age at which they started

jobs
education

You might be surprised to learn that millennials are saving more than the generation behind them. ALL PHOTOS ISTOCK saving was 24, younger than Generation X's median starting age of 30, according to a Harris Poll conducted for the Transamerica Center for Retirement Studies.

- 39% of millennials are defined in Transamerica's survey as "super savers" — they're saving more than 10% of their salary. That's close to the 15% experts often recommend.

- Millennials are on track to replace 78% of their estimated retirement expenses, according to a 2018 Fidelity survey. That's a healthy rate!

- About one in six millennials have saved $100,000 or more, according to Bank of America's Better Money Habits survey.

But investing has millennials a little spooked

Here's the bad news:

- 42% of millennials are investing conservatively, compared with 38% of Generation X investors and 23% of baby boomers, according to the Fidelity survey.

- Millennials held 25% of their investments in cash, compared to 19% of investors overall, according to a Charles Schwab & Co. study of client data.

- 20% of millennials say their retirement money is invested mostly in bonds, money market funds, cash or other stable investments, compared with 15% each for older generations, according to Transamerica.

- 66% of people aged 18 to 29 (and 65% of those 30 to 39) say investing in the stock market is scary or intimidating, compared with 58% of those aged 40 to 54 and 57% of those 55 and older, according to an Ally Financial survey.

So, what's the problem?

It's no surprise that investors who came of age during the 2008-09 financial crisis would hesitate to embrace the stock market — the S&P 500 lost about 57% of its value between October 2007 and March 2009, when the oldest millennials were in their late 20s.

The problem is, some millennials may be putting their retirement for money market bank accounts hasn't topped 0.3% in the past eight years.

Of course, it's difficult to generalize across a generation that includes about 71 million people. Plenty of millennials are making smart financial decisions, says Meir Statman, professor of finance at Santa Clara University and author of "Finance for Normal People."

"On the one hand, you have really great awareness on the part of millennials of the need to save for retirement," Statman says. But, he adds, many people "are still scarred by the financial crisis."

Put risk in perspective

For people nervous about investing, the key is to put stock-market risk in perspective, Statman says.

"The risk of the stock market is not the biggest risk in life," Statman says. "Taking risk is not a luxury; it's a necessity. If you look at risk in the overall context of life, you see that we take risk not because we like risk, but because we have aspirations. Aspirations are the engine, the driver of the train, and risk is really one of the cars of the train." ANDREA COOMBS security at risk by shying away from stocks now. Consider that the S&P 500 averaged a 7.92% return from January 2007 through December 2017, adjusted for inflation and with dividends reinvested — and that time period includes the financial crisis. By comparison, the average annual return

SISTER JEAN: EVERYONE'S SISTER

How cynical is the American population?

Many people are already sick and tired of Sister Jean, the 98-year-old nun and chaplain of the Loyola Chicago men's basketball team, who has popped up on our TV screens every other minute during the NCAA tournament.

The fact of the matter is — America needs Sister Jean right now. We all need a kind, Betty White-looking grandmother in a wheelchair who is offering inspiration to get us through this dark age of Trump, Facebook pillaging all of our private information, and killer self-driving Uber cars.

The 2018 NCAA tournament will be over just eight days from now. So — while we still can — let's just embrace Sister Jean and the improbable Loyola Chicago team, which became just the fourth 11 seed to reach the Final Four (LSU in 1986, George Mason in 2006, VCU in 2011).

DANNY NEEDS A DATE

One of the low-key playboys in all of sports, Miami Dolphins wide receiver Danny Amendola is back on the market. The former Patriots star is apparently ditching all things New England as he and model Olivia Culpo (former Miss USA and Rhode Island native) broke up this past week — partly because Amendola was upset that Culpo posed 98 percent nude in the recent Sports Illustrated Swimsuit issue, according to US Weekly.

Culpo, stunningly, also didn't want to move to gorgeous South Beach with Amendola.

Here's guessing both of these kids will land on their feet, though.

Amendola, not so long ago, was dating "Good Morning Football" co-host Kay Adams — which has made for some awkward NFL Network television since their split — with Adams having to try to zig and zag around talking about the big-game slot receiver.

ANSWER THE QUESTION

Props to CBS sideline reporter Dana Jacobson for not backing down to Florida State men's basketball coach Leonard Hamilton on Saturday night. After Hamilton's FSU team lost to Michigan in the Elite 8, Jacobson simply asked Hamilton the question everyone in America was asking: "Why didn't you foul with 11 seconds left on the clock?"

The Seminoles were down four points at the time. A missed free throw or two and FSU could have forced OT or even won. Hamilton rolled his eyes and put up one hell of a fuss while being called out on a monumentally dumb coaching decision.

It's a moment that may have fully resurrected Jacobson's career.

Remember, Jacobson is the woman who ultimately got canned by ESPN for saying, "F— Jesus" and for making jokes about Mike Ditka's manhood at a "Mike and Mike Roast" (yes, this actually happened) in 2007.

Time heals all wounds, and Jacobson is finally back in the lime-light for — this time — a job well done.

Aries Don't labor over what might have been. A good outlook will help you see what's possible. Take responsibility for your future. Choose to be productive instead of complaining.

Taurus Play to win. No matter what you do, it's important to give your all and make your mark. You'll be judged by your effort and your ability to get along with others.

Gemini Matters pertaining to personal finance or legal or medical issues should not be ignored. A detailed look will reveal a change that can save you time and money.

Cancer Strike up a dialogue that will help you bring matters of concern to the forefront. Setting up new guidelines will enrich a relationship that has been waning.

Leo An opportunity that someone offers you will not turn out to be as lavish as it appears. Don't fall for hype when you should be focused on your responsibilities.

Virgo Making travel plans, attending business meetings and broadening your awareness regarding projects you want to pursue should be on your agenda.

Libra Make sure you are on the same page as the people you are dealing with today. Overspending to please someone or to keep the peace will only make matters worse.

Scorpio An opportunity to visit someone you find interesting or informative will also help you make a decision that can change how or where you live or what you pursue.

Sagittarius Don't wait for someone to complain. If changes need to be made at home or to a relationship, make the effort. Love and romance will improve your life.

Capricorn Don't feel you must share your intentions with anyone prying into your personal affairs. Preparation will help prevent a peer from trying to dismantle your plans.

Aquarius Anyone trying to entice you into doing something that isn't good for you should be pushed aside. Spend time with friends who have better morals and standards.

Pisces Look for a solution that has worked in other situations. A couple of alterations to the way you have done things in the past will prove to be successful. EUGENIA LAST
